I believe in miracles

Today is a special day – it's our son's birthday!

Time to remember when he and his siblings were little.

Bedtimes were the best of times back then:

- First we had a story (or two)
- then a chat about the day – the good and the difficult
- lastly we'd ask Jesus to help

The boys were about 6 or 7 when something wonderful happened to us one very special bedtime. I was not at all well then, glandular fever had returned, (not easily detected or forgotten), a debilitating and joy zapping illness. After prayers that night, I remained sitting weakly on the floor when a small firm hand touch my arm and I heard:

“Dear Lord Jesus, please make mummy better”!

In that instant, the power and presence of God entered my body and sickness and weakness left – I couldn't see it, or hear it, but I felt it - I was completely and instantly healed.

I was encouraged to write the above in response to the fact that myths and magic figure so largely on screens and in books today - they seem almost to have taken the place of truth. There are numerous accounts of Jesus' miracles in the New Testament – how wonderful He still continues to do what no one else can or will.
